Chandigarh traffic police offers freebies to girls in helmets

Do Chandigarh girls want to wear helmets?

ETIMES HAD CARRIED AN ARTICLE ON DECEMBER 17, 2017 WHEN THE DEBATE ON WHETHER GIRLS SHOULD WEAR HELMETS FIRST OPENED IN CITY

While Chandigarh already fares high on traffic discipline compared to other cities in the country, the UT traffic department has made up its mind to implement laws more stringently, albeit in velvet gloves. On July 16, the department launched a vast 'awareness drive' to urge girls and women riding two-wheelers to wear helmets. This comes after Chandigarh administration, following a notice issued by the Punjab and Haryana High Court on a suo motu petition on the increasing accidents involving women, made helmets mandatory for women riders. As part of the drive, the department has shortlisted colleges foremost, besides offices with women employees and public places. Led by SSP Security & Traffic (UT) Shashank Anand, the traffic department made a stopover at Punjab University on Wednesday, on the second day of this initiative. Calling it a "historical" drive, Anand hints at exploiting this as an opportunity to create dialogue with the public, rather than forcing rules.

Girls who are not wearing helmets are being offered roses to serve as gentle reminders

I was looking forward to this rule. I live in Himachal and there helmets are compulsory for women too. I was shocked when I came here and saw that women drive two-wheelers without helmets. Moreover, women give such illogical explanations like hairstyle will get messed up, or something like that."

I always used to wear helmet while driving my two-wheeler even before the decision came out. Noe, I think everyone would have to wear it too as no one would want to have a Challan right? Girls never used to wear helmets for their beauty reasons, but now they would have to."

Chandigarh Traffic police has launched an awareness drive, 'Helmet pehnao, beti bachao' for women to wear helmets. This is a precursor to challans that would eventually come into force after the conclusion of this massive drive

EXCERPTS FROM CONVERSATION WITH SSP SECURITY & TRAFFIC (UT) SHASHANK ANAND

What is the drive all about?

We launched this awareness drive from PGGCG-42 on July 16 and will take it to every college in city limits. We intend it to permeate down to every lady/girl riding a two-wheeler. We aren't really bothered about enforcement yet, instead we are keen on a positive reinforcement about developing a safety mindset through helmets.

You have been giving out freebies to college students in the last two campuses.

Yes, that is part of the encouragement we offer to them for doing the right thing. We gave free petrol coupons worth ₹100 to girls in helmets at PGGCG-42, and coffee mugs to those in PU. We are also offering umbrellas, given the monsoons, fridge magnets, and quality helmets to needy girls after collaborating with a sponsor.

You said that challans is not priority right now, what is?

Eventually challans will happen too. But, we first want to spread encouragement for protecting their lives through helmets, and also leverage this as an opportunity to enhance public-police interaction, which is a collateral advantage of this drive.

In your opinion, sensitising populations works better than policing?

This is also part of policing. Only, the approach is different. We are aiming at inculcating behavioural changes in target populations through this apparently soft stance, rather than force it through rules. A ticket can always be issued for traffic violations, but personally, I would be the happiest if we didn't have issue a single challan (laughs).
